WEDNESDAY MORNING:::PEBRUARY 10, 1875. Now, our Hores for Mr. Speaker Blaine's future career are revived. He has behaved himself lately in such a way as to merit the reproaches and denunciations of the New York Sun and similar Opposition journals.

FOR WANT of some better epithet, the New York Tribune characterizes THE NA-TIONAL REPUBLICAN as a "kitchen organ." We admit that this neither sounds well nor is it original. But we prefer to be called that, and a horde of Wall street stock gamblers, as the Tribune is

OUR Wilmington (N. C.) correspondent this morning furnishes our readers with some definite information regarding the political maneuvers of the Democrats of that State, who are now applying for a $200,000 appropriation for the improvement of the Cape Fear river. It will be seen that the attempt to disfranchise Republican voters by gerrymandering the city of Wilmington is, as we have said, simply infa-

WE ARE PLEASED to observe that Jennings, the unnaturalized English editor of the New York Times, is growing in his knowledge of American politics and geography under the vigorous teachings of THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN. He has, in these last days of the second session, discovered that there are two members of Congress by the name of Platt, and has recently celebrated the discovery by renewing his personal abuse of Platt, now first named as from New York. We presume Mr. Platt's constituents will have something to say about this, and will open the eves of Mr. Jennings' employers to the situation in a manner which will be understood and felt. It may be that the frightful decrease in the circulation of this bogus Republican sheet, in the rural districts of New York State, where Mr. Platt's Republicanism is known and appreciated, is the cause of this sudden exhibition of spleen.

THE Opposition press finds in the message of the President regarding Arkansas affairs evidence of his design to establish a military despotism. For weeks and months THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN has advocated the policy advanced by the President in that message simply because it is intended to relieve the suffering people of Arkansas from a military despotism under the White League rule. The response of the Republican press of the coun. at a conclusion not altogether warranted, try to the President's suggestions gives us unmistakable evidence that the masses of the party will sustain him in this policy. The envenomed vawpings of Dans, Whitelie Reid and other scribblers of like kidney, are meaningless and empty sounds. No true man, no man who has he interests of the country at heart, and no man who really desires a restoration of good government in Arkansas, will deny the President's position. All that remains now to be done to secure this result is the adoption of Mr. Ward's resolution recognizing Joseph Brooks as Governor of the State. The President has done his duty in the premises. Will Congress do the same? The weak-kneed members of that body need not be frightened by the mouthings of the Independent Press. We repeat that the heart of the loyal people of the country is with the President.

THE ignorant editor of the New York Times vainly attempts to instruct his readers regarding the "Issues of the Next Canvass," and alleges that they "will relate ' largely to the South and questions grow-'ing out of the late war." Of course they will; but the Times man owes his knowledge in this regard to the suggestion of Senator Carpenter. Does he know-this Times scribbler-that the same issues were involved in the last Presidential campaign? Does he know that the Ku-Klux then had been recently suppressed, as the White League soon will be? Does he know that in point of fact those issues are doubly intensified row? We can inform him, however, that the last campaign partook to a great extent of the character of a personal contest, and that Mr. Greeley's record was more frequently the subject of debate than anything else. In the coming campaign, no matter who the candidates may be, the horrible crimes of the Southern midnight assessins, the covert treasonable efforts within the Union to defy the authority of the National Government, and the overthrow of good legally-established State governments, will be presented as topics to attract public attention and concentrate the efforts of the loyal people of the country to secure another victory for the Republican these suggestions as he studied the idea of Senator Carpenter which straggled by some fortuitous error into his muddled brain. And above all things let him remember that he cannot discuss these subjects as a Republican editor should without having previously studied them.

IS IT STATESMANSHIP!

The course taken by certain gentlemen in the House last Saturday indicates that they propose to resist every attempt to advance the material interests of the country. The speeches of Messrs. E. H. Roberts, Burchard, Townsend and Dawes against the Hennepin canal bill apply to all measures looking to cheap transportation. Mr. Dawes made the poverty of the Treasury an excuse for his protest, and naively ad vised the friends of the project to await the action of the House on the revenue bills. yet to be introduced; while the essential thought of all the rest was that Congress should resolutely refuse to take one step in the line of internal improvement.

If these gentlemen are right, all the adwanced thinking of the day is wrong. They shut their eyes to palpable facts; they close their ears to the outcry against corporate extortion; they deny that Government has follows: any other function except to stand still while the people suffer, unless to gather in taxes what may be left of their hard earnings. It must do nothing to relieve their necessities; nothing to develop national resources; nothing to facilitate interchanges of products. And why? Because if a good measure is indorsed, a bad one may be; the one is an "entering wedge" to the other; if millions of people are made prosperous by a needed canal, millions of dollars may hereafter be filched from the Government for a canal that is not needed. In short, these statesmen are afraid to do what is just and expedient now, because another Congress may thereby be led into doing what is unjust and inexpedient. Is it not barely possible that their successors will be able to

the organized demand of the northwest for relief from the embargo upon her welfare? Is the report of Mr. Windom's Senate committee, with its vast storehouse of facts, disclosing all the disabilities of internal commerce, to be whistled down the wind by the idle fears of timid statesmen? Is nothing to come of it except a confession of incompetency to deal with the situation? If this is the best a Republican Congress can de, with an internal improvement plank in every national platform, what wonder if Republicans conclude that it had lost "the breed of noble men" who have the faith, intelligence and courage to lead the party to future victory?

This do nothing policy is the dry-rot that is eating out the heart of the Republican organization. It is this that aggravates the Southern problem to day. A vigorous course two years ago would have saved both power and honor. The same may be said of the currency question, which has been permitted to demoralize and divide. Now, business is sick with panic, industry is paralyzed, the grain-grower finds his way to market blockaded by overcharges, the balance of trade is against us because American wheat is displaced by its European rivals in Liverpool. And when relief, which only the Government can grant, is asked, there are those who would refuse because some future Congress may be betraved into a blunder. Is that the way to than to be known as the organ of Jay Gould | revive the drooping energies of the coun-

> The Hennepin canal will supply the lacking link in an all-water line from the Mississippi to the lakes and the eastern seaboard. Its construction would save ten millions a year to Iowa, Minnesota, Ne braska, Kansas and Missouri. They cannot build it in the State of Illinois, and she has declared by her constitutional enactment that she will not. It is as much a national work as the improvement of the Mississippi or the opening of its mouth. There are railroads enough now, but they combine, and it costs as much to transport a bushel of grain from the Mississippi two hundred miles to Chicago, as from the latter city nine hundred miles to New York. Must this go on forever, rather than invest four millions of national treasure in connecting great natural water-ways? Is it wise statesmanship to refuse because another Congress may be asked to build a canal to the moon?

Mr. Dawes counsels delay until he has tested the temper of the House on additional taxation. But that looks as if he had hold of the short end of the lever. How much new taxation will he get from those whom he has treated to the wet blanket of such speeches? If the House should vote a moderate sum for needed improvements that promise relief to the suffering millions, he can safely ask it to provide the means, and, in addition, whatever may be needed to replenish his exhausted Treasury. And the expenditure, with the promise of commercial advantages to be realized, will naturally aid to put business on a good footing, and to revive confidence in the sagacity of those who bear sway in our national councils.

HOW TO TREAT THE AREANSAS QUESTION. Four estimable gentlemen, constituting a majority of the special committee on Arkansas affairs, have presented their views to the House of Representatives and arrived we think, by their own statement of the facts relating to the controversy for the government of that State. We propose to repeat some of their expressed opinions and views as arguments in favor of the adoption of the resolution presented by Mr. Ward, which reads as follows:

Resolved That Joseph Recoks he by the people of Arkansas elected to the office of Governor of said State under the constitution of 1868, for the period of four years, ending in January, 1877, and said constitution never having been legally overturned or abroented, and being still in force, he is the lawful Governor of said State of Arkansas. On page 3 of the report of the committee they sum up the result of the testimony in regard to the election as follows: "Without going more into detail, the committee are unanimously of opinion that by a fair and honest return and count of the votes actually given at the election Brooks was elected Governor, and of right should have been so declared." That is exactly what the above resolution proposes to do, and although it might have been done two years ago, Congress, to whom the case has come at last, cannot make right that neglect by neglecting now or refusing to declare what the committee unanimously say should have been declared two years ago. The circuit judge who gave judgment in favor of Brooks on the 15th of April, 1874, had arrived practically at the same conclusion as that reached so unanimously by the committee, but the arguments presented by the majority in favor of no action at this time were just as weighty then as they now are. The mass of the people on both sides were more inclined to peace and good government, and to allow all the enjoyment of their legal rights one year ago than they are to-day.

These "young men who cannot be restrained" are far more numerous and demonstrative now than then, and they control the Garland government. In support of this assertion we cite the fact that there is in Little Rock a militia company composed of those "young men who cannot be restrained," called the Hallie Rifles. This organization decided that, as Garland was reorganizing the militia, and making brigadier generals about as thick as blackberries, party. Now, let the Times man study | they must have one of their number dubbed a brigadier. Accordingly, they sent a deputation to the executive office to present their request, which Garland refused to grant. These young men thereupon disbanded their organization and laid down their arms, at the same time declaring that they were as willing to fight as ever, and would reorganize if their demands were complied with. In a few days Garland had appointed their brigadier general, and the Hallie Rifles reorganized and recently fired salutes in honor of the majority report of the Arkansas committee.

In relation to the action of the Arkansas House of Representatives in rejecting Mr. Brooks' petition to contest the election of Baxter, the report of the committee is as follows, on page 4:

"The singular unanimity of this vote can hardly be accounted for except upon the supposition that there was some connection between this vote and the appointment soon after by Baxter of more than forty members of this Legislature to various offices in the State."

The manner in which Baxter corruptly prevented the hearing of Brooks' contest by the Legislature is thus clearly set forth. How he treated the judgment of the circuit court against him is related on page b, as

"Baxter might have answered over by filing an affidavit of merits, or he might have appealed to the supreme court: but he did not do either. Indeed, Baxter appears from the first to have insisted that no court had jurisdiction to try the contest, and constantly declured that he would not be deprived of the office by the judgment of any court." On the same page it is stated that the supreme court of the State, in the mandamus case of Brooks vs. Page, held that the judgment of the Pulaski circuit court was regular and conclusive, that the court had jurisdiction, and the judgment had been allowed to become final. On this point, however, the majority say:

"The committee has not deemed it necessar to decide whether the Legislature or court had jurisdiction, or whether the jurisdiction was exclusive in either, or how conclusive a decision by either was on the question. Should duty, it becomes important to know who was elected Governor in 1872, they would hardly feel estopped from finding the truth on account of any adjudication it has received."

We submit that Congress should, so conclude and should perform its duty by adopting Mr. Ward's resolution. Brooks, having been recognized as the lawful Governor of the State by the competent judicial tribunals of the State, he was Governor from that date de jure, and being in possession of the State-house archives, surrounded by a force strong enough to have annihilated Baxter and his co-conspirators. and his authority recognized by all the State officers excepting only the Secretary well, and this being admitted, and the subsequent recognition of Baxter having been since admitted as erroneous, there was no validity in his proclamation convening the Legislature; none in the action of the body which assembled and pretended to be a Legislature; none in the so-called convention or the pretended elections held pursuant to the orders of those bodies.

On pages 10 and 11 the committee agree that the act of the so-called Legislature tional, and therefore fatally defective. Also, that no legislative power is inherent in such conventions, and none can be delegated to them by the Legislature, and if application could have been made to a proper court, the election officers provided for by the convention would have been enjoined as was done in the case of the Philadelphia election officers by the supreme court of Pennsylvania.

Why this could not be done in Arkansas is shown on page 12, the bayonets and martial law proclamations of Baxter sustaining the enactments of the fraudulent Legislature prohibiting all judges from issuing any writ or process whatever relating to the holding of the elections provided

The extraordinary vote reported in favor of the constitution is explained on page 13, as follows:

"At the same time, considering that the entire machinery of the election was in the hands of the friends of the constitution, and the free habit of voting which seems to have obtained in the State, the committee do not doubt but that great liberality was allowed in voting, and more or less illegal votes taken." If the committee had compared that vote, as reported, with the Democratic vote obtained a few weeks later on Congressmen, they would have been able to declare that the "free habit of voting" and "great liberality" accounted for at least 40,000 of the 78,697 votes reported in favor of the constitution.

On page 15 the majority report a discovery that the reconstruction constitution contained rather a surplusage of professions of loyalty, and therefore that the omission of the declaration contained in the constitution of 1868, that "the para-'mount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government in the exer-'cise of its constitutional powers," &c., was immaterial.

The most extraordinary part of the maority report is contained on page 16, and reminds one very much of James Buchanan's opposition to secession, while he could find no ground for coercion or interference with the affairs of a State.

While the committee regard all the proceedings as defective, still being under the pretence of legal authority and under the forms of law, therefore the majority do not recommend any action. To refuse to act now, upon this experiment at revolution, would be most disastrous and disgraceful, and we do not believe the statesmen of the country will for a moment seriously entertain the idea. To do so would be to invite general anarchy and revolution. If one State may be revolutionized by militia or White League organizations, why not the entire South? We cannot afford to set the precedent asked for in the case now under consideration. Mr. Ward's resolution, sustained as it is by the facts reported by the entire committee, and supported by elaborate citations from authorities and extracts from testimony taken before the committee, should be promptly adouted.

A PLAGUE ON BOTH YOUR HOUSES. The President has a quiet but very effect ual method of settling disputes between rival aspirants for office. He put it in practice in his selection of the members of the Executive Commission for this District. Having first indicated his preference for a citizen resident, who was promptly rejected, he then sought eminent men, in whom he had confidence, from abroad, to rule over us, wisely judging that such a commission would be more acceptable to all concerned than any other, and would give time for the healing of dissensions and animosities which have arisen out of fancied abuse of power over private interests. The method has been found to operate well here. Our government has been administered impartially, at least so far as the respective interests of the various parties engaged in the late investigation are concerned. So in Colorado Territory; the whole population has been fearfully agitated and divided into rival factions, inside of the Republican party, upon the question of the executive offices. McCook was only appointed and confirmed after a terrific con test of the most bitter and malignant character. It was idle to expect that his administration could give undivided satisfaction under such circumstances. He was condemned by his enemies without a hearing or a fair trial. His case was prejudged. They were determined that no good could come out of Nazareth. He found it to be so, and tendered his resignation. The President determined to select for his successor an intelligent, able, disinterested and impartial man, in whose wisdom and discretion he at least could repose confidence. As the President is alone responsible to the people for the acts of this Governor, perhaps it is just possible that he not only had the right to select the man whom he knew was well qualified for the situation, but that he also displayed good sense and sound judgment in doing so. He may even have done it without any consultation with the politicians of Colorado. If he had made a bad selection at their suggestion, there is have shirked all the responsibilities of the not the least doubt but that they would act upon him. Indeed, it is the chief characteristic of leaders in partisan politics of the present day to assume to dictate the appointments of the Executive, and not infrequently to foist upon him dishonest and incompetent persons, to whom they owe some political debts, and when the unfitness of the incumbent is exposed, to leave the appointing power to suffer all the odium attaching to the selection. It is time that this evil practice was ended. President Grant has given it several wholesome checks, but never without ominous growls from some of those who arrogate to themselves the position of office almoners for their party. He has indicated a fervent and earnest desire to reform the civil service in all its parts, in order to promote its efficiency and elevate its character. His efforts have not been heartily seconded by his party, or better results might have been attained. Notwithstanding, the service has been very industry. But in all his executive and administrative acts the President has never shirked the responsibilities properly attaching to his position to the shoulders of others. onothing is to be done, who is to answer | Congress conclude that the National Govern | Among all the charges of his enemies, and

"A FORETASTE OF THE FUTURE." If any one wants a new reason for the fact that Republicans in and out of Congress read the New York Times, when they read it at all, with derision and contempt, they will find it in the leading article of last Saturday's issue, "A Foretaste of the Future." This article is ostensibly devoted to comments on the disorderly proceedings of last week, but in fact is a series of insults of State, he was the de facto Governor as to the President and other prominent Republicans. It is another striking illustration of the truth of what we have heretofore said concerning the utter incapacity of "Mr. Jennings, of London," to edit a paper which pretends to have convictions. The stupid malice of the fellow is past all comprehension. Just when the opportunity offers for armigning the Democratic party with great effect, he trots out his private griefs, and because he is no longer invited to put his legs under the President's dinner providing for an election upon the question | table he tries to slap him square in the face of a convention was clearly unconstitu- and vents his spleen at the party in general. If an invitation to dinner would accomplish it, that might be a cheap method of conciliation. Mr. Tom Murphy, however, understands the thing, and his advice might be useful. We observe the Times always defends Mr. Murphy's reign as collector in New York, and always abuses that of Mr. Casey in New Orleans. We advise Casey to apply to Murphy for the use of his patent snob-subducr.

Take the course of the Times on the two leading events in national politics during the last two weeks. The successful effort of the Republicans to so amend the rules that they could, in the prosecution of the legitimate business of the session, put their heels upon the revolutionary attempts of the Democratic minority, received no recognition at the hands of the Times. The entire Republican party in the House voted for it and established it by a two-thirds majority, but the Times had no word of approval for them, and no word of intelligent explanation of the object sought to be effected. During the contest which led to the result it cuffed and kicked Republicans and Democrats alike, in which Jennings was doubtless true to his sympathies, for he has none whatever with any party as constituted in this country. His principal capacity is to fill the ears of his employers with flattery and revenge his private griefs through the columns of their newspaper. On the civil rights bill, passed by an almost unanimous vote of the Republican party against the revolutionary remonstrance of the Democracy, the course of the Times is even more stupid. It dismisses the whole subject, involving a great principle, with a paltry paragraph predicting a disastrous result to the negro as a consequence. Truly, Jennings is great-as a vender of small spites and a judge of other men's wines-but not as an editor of a Republican newspaper.

CERTAIN MEMBERS and guests of the Hiermian Benevolent Society, No. 1, feel aggrieved at the notice of the recent ball of that ociety as published in this journal yesterday No offence was intended by the paragraph. and those who attended may rest assured that THE REPUBLICAN has nothing but kind words and good feeling for them, as it has for all of the good people of the District.
